I just read about the university's announcement to make the tuition costs to same for all students attending our university. It does not matter whether students are state residents, whether they come from other states, or whether they come from other countries. The tuition will be the same no matter what. I do not know who came up with this idea, but I believe this is not a great idea.

First of all, state students and their parents pay local and state fees that pay for the operation of this university. Students from other states do not pay taxes for the construction and operation of universities in my state. Therefore, they should attend universities in their own states because they are paying taxes in those states. If they want to attend this university, they should pay a lot more money than I am paying.

Second of all, international students are not paying taxes in my state either. Nor do they pay any taxes to our federal government. Therefore, they need to pay higher tuition fees to prevent too many of them from enrolling, which will make less room for local students to attend.

Therefore, if out-of-state or international students want to attend my university, they should pay a lot more money for tuition than I am paying. I really hope that administrators will change their minds about this.

The man expresses an opinion about the new announcement. State his opinion and the reasons he has for holding that opinion.
